THURSDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 22, 1860.

THE LATE CAPT. GEORGE McLANE. From the Staunton Vindicator.] The last mail from the Territory of New Mexico brings us the melaucholy tindings of the death of Capt. Geo. McLane, U. S., Army. He was killed in an engagement with $1,25. the Navajoe Indians, at what time or place the telegraphic dispatch does not state. He was a son of the Hon. Louis McLaue, once U. S. Senator from the State of Delaware, and brother of the Hon. R. M. McLane, present

Minister to Mexico. We knew Capt. McLane well. Our acquaintance with him was formed under peculiar, as well as dangerous circumstances:-While acting in the capacity of Indian Agent in New Mexico, a difficulty sprang up between this same tribe and the United States troops. We were ordered to Fort Defiance—the centre of the range of these Indians-and it so happened we fell in with the escort of Capt. McLane, numbering 10 American soldiers and 50 Mexican spies and guides. After traveling three or four days, we came within 50 miles of the Fort. Capt. McLane and ourself, with 8 soldiers and 16 guides, rode off at a rapid gallop about half a mile, to examine a magnificent Canyon, at the head of which was a beautiful, sparkling, gushing stream, called Ojo del Osa, or Bear Spring, which is about 5 miles on the western slope of the great divide between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. When about the centre of the Canyon -125 yards on either side, and three hundred yards from the head--we were saluted by the most terrific yell that ever fell upon 'cars polite"-that thrilling, ringing, chilling war-hoop, which, trembling, quivering upon the air, penetrates with a sharpness that almost stuns the whole nervous system -and up sprang, it seemed to us, a thousand naked savages, (but in reality not more thna 200,) who, yelping and dancing, and slapping their breasts and sides, invited us by gesture and menace to a conflict, at the same time sending greeting a volley of arrows that seemed almost to darken the heavens. The Americans, with the exception of ourself, instantly dismounted-the Mexicans remained on horseback. The fight commenced, and bravely did our gallant few let fly with fatal effect the leaden messengers of death. The Indians in front 300 yards invited our fires by dancing before us, thinking they were out of the range of our shots. But in this they were mistaken, for the Minnie rifle is fatal at one thousand yards. While those in front held out the bait for the ambush, on either side, at 125 yards distance, were secreted those who were to close in and do execution. The, to them, miraculous power of our guns, and the precision with which they were used, saved us from the hand to hand conflict and drove them to the woods. Capt. McLane had just sent a red skin to the great hunting ground, when we espied another on his left with a rifle aiming a deadly shot at him, We called his attention, in a warning voice. to the fact, but he, bent on his game in front, disregarded it. By this time we had dismounted, our position on horseback having attracted nearer to our corporeal man than was agreeable several leaden songsters, which went whistling by our ears. We had searcely gotten from the saddle ere we heard the sharp crack of the Indian's ride, saw Capt McLane clasp his hand to his side, and reel some fifteen feet, when we eaught him. We asked whether he was hurt. He responded that he was shot through the stomach, but thought he could ride to the wagon. He was placed upon his horse, and supported by two faithful soldiers, was taken to the wagon, heaving all the way, which we considered a fatal indication. The rest of us remained in the rear, (except the Mexicans, who having an eye to business as well as pleasure, had dashed off in every direction to stampede and bring into camp the horses of the Indians, thirty-five of which they secured,) to protect the retreat which we did amidst a volleys of arrows, that fell harmless 20 yards from us. When arrived at the wagon, as comfortable pallet as could be made under the circumstances was arranged, and the Captain placed upon it. The first thing he remarked was, "Yost, I have been su honest and true man. Tell my wife I died bravely. (His wife was then in Baltimore the native place of both.) Give her my watch and these, (taking from his sleeves and shirt his gold buttons,) and my purse." We saw the blood was oczing from his right side. We felt his pulse, and found it strong and healtby, but little excited, and suspecting that the wound might possibly be | Alexandria Gazette, and every thing in the cheap less fatal than we had anticipated, we told him we would examine it. On opening his shirt, we found that the ball had struck him just as he was turning to get a cartridge from a man behind him, and had entered immediately below the right nipple, and ranging around the rib about two and a half inches, came out. His first Sergeant saw it, and exclaimed, "Oh! Captain, it is an expressing his gratification at the result of the examination proposed that we should all join him in a glass of El Paso wine, which fore us by a frightened soldier, that the Captain was dead. We met his company about a mile from the Fort coming to bring in the dead body of their Commander .-When they had learned the fact, not even the yells of the savages could have equallforth on that beautiful night, floating on that more than Italian air! For six weeks Captain McLane was confined to his room, during which time we were the recipient of his generous and liberal hospitality, dispensed well as polish of his education. It was noder such circumstances that we formed the acquaintance of Capt. George McLane. To say that acquaintance repined into friendship would be but faintly expressing the warm attachment and high admiration for his many manly traits we Modern Coins, in the Cabinet Collection of the bore him. Brave almost to rashness-generous to a fault-polished in intellect and manners-the soul of chivalry and honor- Director of the Mint, a beautiful octavo volume, $5. a true friend and idolizing husband and father, and a gallant and efficient officerhe leaves the theatre of life regretted by all who knew him, and bemoaned by those who knew him best. We know he fell gallantly fighting, and doubtless impetuously rushing in the lead of his men, for this was his wont in the heat and excitement of bat-
